Faculty teams focus on data collection measures for 3D Project

Members of IUSM faculty participating in the Data-Driven Decisions (3D) project are immersed in the design phase details of the effort.

3D is meant to develop a system for allocating school resources that will support the school's goals for excellence in a time of significant and growing restraints on revenues.

Three committees - design teams - are focused on the education, clinical and research missions to determine the areas in which the school should develop methods for capturing the data that will drive decisions. Their recommendations will be forwarded on to the 3D finance team, which will make a first-pass collection of data to be analyzed at a faculty leadership retreat scheduled for Aug. 9

The research design team is studying which of many research-related activities, including major committee service, should be included in the initial data-collection effort. The education design team is similarly working on development of a list of core educational activities.

The clinical team has been working on such issues as measuring activity at the VA hospital and for contract services.

More information about 3D is at <http://www.medicine.iu.edu/administration/ddd/index.shtml>.

Biochemist to be honored as “Innovator”

Roger Roeske, PhD, will receive the Innovator of the Year Award, during a reception at 4:30 p.m., Wednesday, May 26, at the Indiana University Emerging Technologies Center in Indianapolis.

Dr. Roeske, a professor of biochemistry and molecular biology, is being honored for his contributions to the research on age-related disease, and particularly for his pioneering research that led to the creation of Plenaxis™. That drug offers a promising treatment option for prostate cancer patients; it received FDA approval Nov. 25.

He is the first IU researcher to discover the makings for a drug that made it to market. He was selected by IU's Advanced Research and Technology Institute (ARTI) for his demonstrated success in transferring an IU technology development into a successful commercial application. He will receive a trophy and a $5,000 cash grant.

Dr. Roeske is the second recipient of the annual award. Richard G. Peterson, PhD, IUSM professor of anatomy and cell biology, received the honor in 2003 for his meritorious research in the field of diabetes.

The IU Innovator of the Year Award was made possible by a gift to IU from the Central Indiana Corporate Partnership. The intention of the program is to recognize innovation by IU faculty members whose research results in economic opportunities for Hoosiers.
